Knit one, turn two:

The Indians season, despite some good play lately, took the needle months ago.

Now, the fans can, too.

Different needle, though.

Wednesday, the Indians are partnering with the National NeedleArts Association to promote "Stitch-n-Pitch" night at Jacobs Field. Knitters, needlepointers and folks who do other creative things with needles (other than sticking them into voodoo doll likenesses of Fausto Carmona) are invited to enjoy the game in the mezzanine section (tickets half price at $8) while practicing their craft.

There are restrictions on the kinds of tools (no long knitting needles allowed, security will check each bag). For details and tickets, you must call 216-420-4519.

The event has been a hit at about a dozen other ballparks this year after making its debut in Seattle last year. In Cleveland, there could be a practical benefit. If the team gets any younger, they're going to need fans to knit booties and caps for next year's uniforms.

Stylin':

Browns wide receiver Braylon Edwards, trailed by WJW Channel 8 cameras filming a day-in-the-life feature, looked smooth at the Chanel fashion show fund-raiser at the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame and Museum Thursday. Edwards (curiously not home studying the Steelers as they battled the Dolphins on national TV), chatted up a model while sporting oversized Chanel shades and a sharp custom-made blazer. High fashion is fine. We just hope he looks good in brown and orange.

Michael Heaton and Kim Crow contributed information.
